

Cognition AND RECOVERY

SUPPORTING PEOPLE WITH MENTAL HEALTH CONDITIONS AND COGNITIVE DIFFICULTIES

What are cognitive skills?

They are the underlying mental capabilities that enable us to:

think

plan

How can cognitive difficulties affect people I support?

Cognitive problems affect many areas of a person's daily functioning and are a barrier to independent living. Some of the areas that cognitive functioning can affect include:

- Maintaining attention
- Making decisions
- Planning
- Problem solving
- Keeping a schedule
- Dealing with money
- Changing a routine
- Completing a new activity
- Memory

Research has identified that cognitive issues are often difficult to identify in people with mental health conditions. At times workers feel ill-equipped to support clients with cognitive challenges to improve general functioning and enhance decision-making capacity.

Who is this course for?

This course is for frontline mental health workers and disability support workers who assist clients with mental health related cognitive functioning difficulties to better support people in terms of rehabilitation and access to the NDIS.

We encourage managers and team leaders to attend this training to provide an understanding of current practice issues and to support frontline workers and service response.

How will this course help me?

This course will help you to understand how cognitive functioning affects a person's daily life. It combines the expertise of the community sector and occupational therapy, drawing on the latest research. The course content has been informed by consultation with consumers, carers and families, which investigated the knowledge, skills and training required to better support people living with cognitive functioning difficulties.

After this course you will:

- Work collaboratively with a person to support them to identify recovery goals and select tailored strategies that reflect their cognitive needs
- Apply adaptive principles that support the person to learn and adopt strategies for improved function
- Understand the complex relationship between mental illness and cognitive function
- Understand the relationship between different 'lifestyle' factors and cognitive functioning
- Recognise when a person is experiencing cognitive challenges and how this may be impacting on their everyday functioning
- Recognise when a cognitive assessment may be required and initiate a request
